History of the House

Architecture: Queen Anne

History

Walter B. Hopkinson was born in 1866 and was the son of William N. Hopkinson who served in the Civil War. As a very young man Walter married Alice Tappan Whittier. Alice, who was described as a "lady of rare accomplishments and universally beloved," died in 1898, leaving young Walter Hopkinson a widow.

Evidently Walter fell in love again, this time with his younger sister's good friend Eleanor Robinson.

Walter was a descendant of one of the first settlers of Newbury. He was a tea importer, employed by a Boston firm for 40 years and was president of that firm for 12 years. He was mayor of Newburyport during World War I, from 1917-1918.

Walter was chairman of the committee which presented the Civil War Volunteer monument at Atkinson Common to the city, as well as presenting the Civil War tablets that are there. He researched records from all over the country to make sure that the list was accurate .

Walter was also a Republican delegate to the national convention in Philadelphia in 1900 and an alternate delegate in 1904. And when he died in 1946 all municipal flags were flown at half-mast, and the members of the city council met at City Hall and went to the funeral together.

In 1905 Walter and Eleanor move to a lovely Victorian Queen Anne house, built around 1881 at 7 Pond Street. The deed is not in Walter's name, but is in Eleanor's name and it stays that way until she, as a widow sells the home in 1949. It is given to Eleanor for a dollar by Chauncey Dodge of the Newburyport Dodge Shoemaking empire.
